

The White House party watches parade of 5,000 marines. Gen. Lejeune, commandant of the marines, at right.

Prof. Hall of the Naval Observatory takes a peep at Mars when the latter came quite near—within several million miles—of Washington recently.

just as they appeared at the Court of St. James. At left: Viscount Lascelles and the Viscountess (Princess Mary) at the opening of the brilliant court at Buckingham Palace. Center: Our own ambassador, George Harvey, and Mrs. Harvey. At right: Candler Cobb, assistant commercial attache to the American embassy, and Mrs. Cobb.

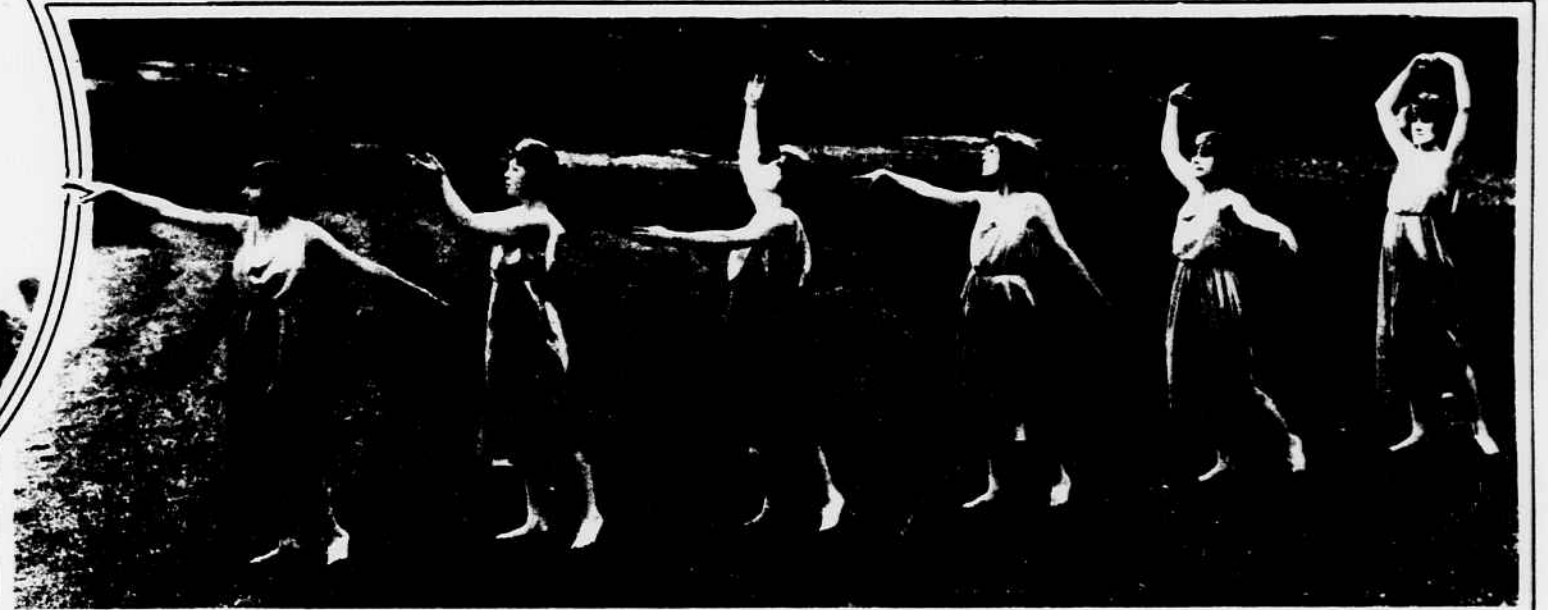

On their way to Gettysburg, where they went through their annual maneuvers, the marines pass in review before President Harding.

How San Francisco was "all lit up" for the Shriners. The town clock is all prettied up and carries the symbol of the Shrine.

Duke Kahanamoku of Hawaii, one of the world's greatest swimmers, who will soon compete in a number of big aquatic events in the United States.

Commencement does not always mean the carrying of a daisy chain, or a long procession of caps and gowns and a number of drawn-out speeches on success in life. Here we have the Elmira, N. Y., College girls doing the rhythmic for the benefit of graduation week visitors.

